GOALS

From being at UW, I hope to expand my understanding of topics I am passionate about. In the past few years, I have been introduced to a lot of topics that are new to me that I find very interesting, and while I have some ideas and preliminary understandings I don’t feel versed enough to fully engage in a discussion about these issues.

One academic goal that I have, is to be accepted into the Visual Communication design Major. To do this, I will have to receive a 3.7 or higher in DES 166 next quarter, or develop a strong portfolio and application. Although my other classes are also important, I will need to devote extra time and energy to this one to ensure that I am successful.

A personal goal that I have for this year, is to make some new friends. To achieve this goal so far, I have joined 1 club, signed up for a pen pals program, and am trying to connect with my classmates outside of class.

MY SUPPORT SYSTEM

Right now, my support system is entirely at home because I am not living on campus. I get my support from my family and friends, and my therapist. When I am able to move to campus, I will still have support from home, but not in the same way. It will be important for me to establish connections with friends and community members to help make my transition easier, and provide support should I need it.

HOW WILL INVOLVEMENT SUPPORT MY GOALS?

Being involved will help me be successful, because it will hopefully improve my mental health, it will add to my resume for major application, and it will give me opportunities to discuss topics I am passionate about.

WHY AM I HERE?

I came to the University of Washington for their design program, and also because UW was the closest to home out of all of the schools I got into.

WHAT IS SUCCESS?

Success at the UW will mean completing my degree while actually enjoying myself. I still want to get good grades, but it is most important to me that I am happy and healthy.

BEING FULLY ENGAGED

To be a fully engaged member of the university community, one must be familiar with the people around oneself, have a desire to contribute to the wellbeing of others, and understand the role that everyone plays in the community.
